THE LADY GODIVA PROCESSION.

AFTER an interval of eleven years the Lady Godiva's ride through Coventry was on Monday revived, amid great pomp and ceremony, and attracted an immense influx of visitors. On Saturday and Sunday by railway, and by vehicles of all descriptions by road, crowds poured into the ancient city of Coventry from all the towns and villages in the district within a circuit of many miles; and on Monday morning the London and North-Western, the Great Western, and the Midland Railways, by excursion train, added vast multitudes to the number of strangers already in the city.

The procession formed near the entrance to St. Mary's Hall, and from that point proceeded through the principal streets of the city. First came two heralds, dressed in strangely shaped coats richly embroidered with armorial devices. Next followed the huge elephant from Wombwell's menagerie, with and half green—a representative of the city arms, with the exception of the catomomian on the top of the castle, which was omitted. Then Wombwell's band, in a carriage drawn by four canals. After the band fourteen city guards, clad in the old iron armour, which, except on state occasions, has hung in wealth. A couple of banners came next, and then St. George, armed cap-a-pie, and a spear in his hand. After St. George came an attendant in the costume of a Knight Templar. Then followed representatives of the old city guilds, with streamers illustrative of the trades to which they belonged, and little children in rich silk or satin dresses, of various colours, riding upon gaily caparisoned horses, led by men wearing sashes, cockades, and rosettes of ribbons—first the Drapers' Company, then the Cappers', and after them the Worsted Weavers' Company. The Warwickshire Yeomanry band, in uniform, followed next; and then the members of the City Volunteer Fire Brigade, about fifty in number, in their uniform, and accompanied by their engine. After the fire brigade came the members of the Godiva Lodge of the Ancient Order of Foresters, in Robin Hood costume. Next came Edward the Black Prince, in an ancient suit of black armour, attended by pages in costumes of the period. Next followed a band of music, the performers being the scholars belonging to a local charity school. After them came the members of the London Order of Odd Fellows, with streamers and little children, richly dressed and on horseback. After the Odd Fellows came representatives of the Watchmakers' Association, the Watchmakers' Provident Society, the Philanthropic Society, the United Patriots' Society, and the Operative Carpenters' Society, each led by its chairman, and accompanied by a streamer and gaily-dressed children upon horseback, called followers. Then came the Volunteer Rifle Corps band, after which the city banner and two little boys on horseback, dressed in the full civic costume of the city erier and beadle. Next came two heralds, habited in a similar garb to that worn by the two who led the procession, and like the former ones, bearing long straight trumpets, which they blew at central points in the route; and after the heralds came the great feature of the procession, namely, Lady Godiva, represented by Madame Letitia. The lady was dressed in silk dressings, with a white satin petticoat fastened at the hips, and reaching to within a few inches of the knees, the petticoat being profusely embroidered with silver lace. On her head she wore a countess's coronet set with brilliants, from which flowed a long white gossamer lace veil, enveloping the whole of her person, except the face and bosom; her hair was loose, and fell in large masses over her shoulders, and on her bosom she wore a large brooch in the shape of a star, composed of brilliants. She rode a beautiful milk-white steed, adorned with dark blue velvet trappings ornamented with gold, and on the four corners of the housing were large stars formed of brilliants, the other part of the trappings being similarly adorned; on each side rode a very handsome boy habited as a page, and two little girls in light blue satin dresses, and hats with white plumes. After the lady came other children followers; then Leofric, Earl of Mercia, banners, pages, and followers, &c. &c. So great was the crowd round her ladyship's palfrey, that it required the services of a body of strong men, armed with stout cudgels, to clear the way.

Some idea of the appearance of the procession may be gathered from the fact that it reached nearly a mile and a quarter in length. Every house-top and window in the line of procession was crowded with spectators. Temporary platforms erected in the streets, and carriages, carts, with other vehicles on the line, seemed breaking down with occupants, and thousands of spectators lined the streets. By favour of Sir Charles Wetherall, General Commanding the Midland district, the two companies of the 1st Royal Dragoons now stationed at Coventry were allowed to accompany the procession and keep the crowd back from breaking the line or obstructing its progress. The procession started soon after twelve, and was not broken up until nearly five o'clock.

THE LATE NED ADAMS.

ASORNER of the old school of boxers has passed away, and suddenly too, in a fit of apoplexy. Our illustration of the deceased pugilist will be found in another column, and it is gratifying to learn that the P.R.A. have guaranteed and paid £5 to his widow to assist her in discharging the funeral expenses. Some further contributions for the widow and the fatherless will but be becoming in those who have known poor Ned in more prosperous times. There is no telling to what we may all be subject, and we shall right willingly announce any contributions on their behalf. Adams' career is thus quoted in Stations.—

"Adams was born November, 1822, weight 9st 10lb; beat an aspirant, at Villiers, near Vincennes, France, purse; beat Tom Ford, Bois de Boulogne, near Paris; beat Tom Smith (East End Sailor), £20 a side, 20min, 18 rounds, opposite Northfleet, March 24, 1840; beat Jack Forsey, £25 a side, 14min, 25 rounds, near Woking-common, July 21, 1840; beat Tom Miley, £50 a side, 1h, 58min, 64 rounds, near Royston, Cambridgeshire, Oct. 5, 1840; beaten by Cain; beat Carter, £25 a side, 20 rounds, 50 min, Grays, Essex, Oct. 26, 1841; forfeited £40 to Bungaree, the Australian, from ill health, Dec. 23, 1841; beaten by Johnny Walker; beat G. Sinclair (Liverpool Slasher), £100 a side, April 4, 1845, 44 rounds, 16min, Hope Point, below Gravesend (Sinclair fell on Adams foul); draw with George Sinclair, £100 a side, 40 rounds, 20min, Combe, Worcestershire, July 18, 1845 (both men fought to a standstill).

DEATH OF "TOM COATES, THE SLIPPER."—The obituary of this week contain the death of Mr. Thomas Coates, a name well known in connection with sporting events and old English games. For many years Mr. Coates was regarded as one of the first quaters and pigeon shooters in the kingdom, and in this capacity many of his successful matches will be remembered. There is scarcely a game of any kind with which he was not familiar; in many of them he excelled, and in all he soon acquired a remarkable degree of proficiency. He was an excellent player at bowls, and on one or two occasions was seen in the wrestling arena, though there perhaps with less success than anywhere else, because he did not follow it up, and liked better to see it than take part in it. In early life he followed the occupation of a smith, and at his trade was generally considered ingenious and clever. Within the last few years he was best known to the public as a slipper at greyhound coursing.

THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND DOG SHOW.

ALL who pay a visit to "Merrill Islington" will see towering high above the surrounding edifices a gigantic Crystal Palace-like building, the dimensions of which will be best imagined by stating that it is 484ft. long and no less than 290ft. broad. This immense, though light and airy structure, is designated the "Agricultural Hall," and has been erected for the purpose of the various exhibitions which all classes of Englishmen delight to patronise, especially in cattle, and for which this country is so famous. The next great "Smithfield Club Show" will take place here, but its inauguration was devoted to a purpose that was little dreamt of a few years ago—a "dog show," and in no other land could such an exhibition have taken place. Three years ago at Birmingham there was an entry of 250 animals—on the present occasion there is more than one thousand of every size, shape, breed, and quality, and, however we might wish to do justice to the whole, our readers will at once see that it is out of the question to mention their names. A thousand dogs! In our younger day, on the wolds of Lincolnshire, we once saw the Lord of Brocklesby come into the field with "fifty-two couples," never before or since accomplished, and Thomas Hood has said, in his "Last Man,"

And a panting hound pursuing at once,
And a panting hare before.

But the Great North of England Dog Show of 1862 must be seen before any one can form a conception of its extent or the nature of its character. The show is under the highest patronage, for the Duke of Beaufort is the president, and has contributed his good share to the interest of the spectacle by sending a full pack of foxhounds, with keepers to attend to them, and all the appliances of the famous "Kennels of Badminton."—a sight, we opine, that no living Cockney ever witnessed before. This alone is worthy of a visit. There are dogs that can be carried in ease and comfort in the pocket, or in a lady's reticule—there is one that is more than a yard in height, and weighs over 200lb. Here can be heard the sharp yelping of the tiny terrier, the warrier of rats, to the deep baying of the hunter of man, the Cuban bloodhound. There is a Tartar dog that is said to be black inside and out, for his tongue is black, his throat black, every visible part black, and even "black in the white of his eye." Noble Newfoundlanders, true bred English mastiffs, model terriers, black and tan, and every other imaginable specimen of the canine race. The subjoined list of the prize animals must suffice at the present time, although we shall again revert to so interesting a topic for all wish well to man's friend, the ever faithful dog. The Duke of Beaufort generously waived his claim to the chief prize, but the judges presented a silver cup to Mr. Clark, the huntsman, who has the care of the "noble pack." The Baron de Sausse's St. Bernard's were much admired, and there is one of Lord Kingsdown's that the veriest tyro would have picked out as the premier of his class. Mr. Boone's bloodhound "Welcome" there was no mistaking nor did it need the Zingaree ribbon to point out the Newfoundland belonging to Mr. Infield, so well known in the noble game of cricket. There is a pointer, the property of Mr. Puzey, weight over sixty pounds, and no prize was awarded many think that it deserved one, and in the Dalmatians also the same may be said of Mr. Wilson's Fan, who was a particular favourite, more especially with the many elegantly dressed ladies who flocked to the show on Tuesday. Fan is well known to all visitors to the great thoroughfare in London as the "Living Sign of the Spotted Dog in the Strand." Mr. Manderville's Maltese terriers, Mr. Woolmington and Mr. Ashton's Blenheims, Mr. White's English terriers, Mr. Stretcher's dogs, all are worthy of remark, and so are Mr. Tupper's and Mr. D. Tree's, the two animals belonging to the two latter exhibitors, by some misunderstanding, being shut out until after the awards of the judges were given. On Tuesday, the exhibition was thrown open to the public, and although the charge was 2s., still the "bow-rows" were largely patronised. The Liverpool-road was crowded all day with carriages, and our foreign visitors, especially the French, expressed their astonishment as well as delight at the novelty of the sight. The "Fancy" of London were in great force, Mr. Caslake, one of the oldest and most respected of the metropolitans, being well represented by his Spot, a Maltese, Mr. Garwood by his

Price, Mr. Chapman by his well-known "toys," and others too numerous to particularise. Mr. Appleby, the secretary, has had almost a herculean task, but he has been well supported by at least 100 "helpers," nor should we omit to mention that the catering inside, where all can be served according to his means, is excellently well managed by Mr. Deller, of the Wheat Sheaves in the Green, ably assisted by Mr. Friend, of Highbury. The building is far from finished, but it has been fitted up in a way that appeared to satisfy all; and any little shortcomings are not often cared about by British sportsmen. Wednesday was the half-crown day, but our country friends well know that the rest of the week is one shilling. As before stated, we shall again refer to the subject [Next week we shall present our readers with a special prize illustration, and still continue a series at intervals, so that the second successful anniversary of this noble show will be ably and pictorially represented.]
